ENGLAND CANDY EATING LAND

WOMEN INDULGE MORE IN "SWEETS."

Habits of Americans Being Acquired by the Britishers Great Ban of Good Looks,

Temptation is conspicuous in the windows of the bonbon shop, and it is but too easy to succumb. Some of us are munching almost all day long. Not girls only, but their mothers as well, Dentists could tell tales about them. Doctors, too, would have much to say. "How many pounds do you eat in a week?" asked one of these of a fair patient, "About a pound a day," was the answer, and then, as if in excuse, "but mother eats nearly as many as I do." It is fatally easy to set a bad example. Seven pounds of sweets a week bring their own penalties upon the consumer, and especially if a week bring their own penalties upon the consumer, and especially if but little exercise be taken. The confirmed sweet-eater is not fond of welking. She likes to sit in a comfortable chair and read a novel while one of the most attractive attributes.

With sweets at 2s 6d to 4s per pound one may feel almost safe from the adulteration that is but too probable at a very low price. What about the "mixtures" at 4d per pound? They look very pretty. The colors are soft and tempting and the texture is just right, delectably scrunchy, and yet not hard. But what are they made of? Dirty sugar s first on the list. Inferior butter comes next.

For flavorings there are danger as compounds, acetate and nitrate of ethyl, (pineapple,) valerianate of amyl, (apple), acetate of methyl, (jargonelle pear,) distilled from the acids with alcohol and sulphuric acid; and bichramate of potash is used as a pear flavoring. Inferior ujubes are made of ordinary glue ize. Ask the carpenter what size is made of. Licorice is sometimes colored with lamp black, thickened with chalf and starch and stiffened with patent size. These are just a few of the deleterious ingredients to be found in every cheap sweets. Fortunately these are usually sold in neighborhoods where the children and young people cannot afford to buy enough to do them any consider-

"We are rapidly becoming a sweet-eating nation," says a medical journal. Things seem tending that way. Let food inspectors see to it that sweets are pure, and let the girls and women of le'sure make their sweets at home. It is fascinating work, not laborious, yet giving that occupation for the lack of which so many women go to the doctors with imaginary neurotic ailments. And even sweet-making can give the home worker opportunities for helping others. A girl who had made some money by selling her caramels bought with it a good wooden leg for a poor mill girl who had lost a limb in an accident. "I do not feel so proud," says the donor, with a happy laugh, "when I think that it is my caramel leg that is stumping about that mill now!"

Is not this the sort of thing that makes life worth living? this worker and her good deed with the girl who, by her own admission goes daily into a certain shop and eats liberally from all the little dishes in which samples are set out.
